Quotes and Notes

“All true songs of worship are born in the wilderness of suffering.”

- Michael Card, A Sacred Sorrow

“Lament leads to trust, but the path is not always clear or straightforward. By turning to prayer, laying out our complaints, and boldly asking, we are brought by God to a place of growing trust in him. Lament creates a path through the messy wilderness of pain.”

- Mark Vroegop, Dark Clouds, Deep Mercy

“Where does this psalm lead us? As is the pattern of the Christian life, David begins in darkness but fights toward light; he begins in feelings of death (v. 3) but moves toward life; he begins, in a sense, in crucifixion but moves to resurrection. For David knows he can trust in God’s ‘steadfast love,’ his covenantal insistence on delivering his people (v. 5).

But if David can bank everything on God, even when on the brink of despair, how much more can we today? For David saw God’s steadfast love only in fairly abstract terms, in past acts of deliverance through events such as the exodus. We see God’s steadfast love in concrete terms, in the great climactic act of deliverance in the person of his own Son. Jesus Christ was steadfast love embodied not merely in an event but in a person.”

- ESV Devotional Psalter

“We may not be wholly free from sorrow, but it is nevertheless necessary that this cheerfulness of faith rise above it, and put into our mouth a song on account of the joy which is reserved for us in the future, although not yet experienced by us; just as we see David here preparing himself to celebrate in songs the grace of God, before he perceives the issue of his troubles.”

- John Calvin (1509-1564), Commentary on the Psalms

“‘Tempest-tossed soul, be still; my promised grace receive’; ‘Tis Jesus speaks—I must, I will, I can, I do believe.’ Lord, this reminds me that believing the promise of your presence in my suffering takes time, and grows slowly, through stages in prayer. So I will pray until my heart rejoices in you. Amen.”

- Tim and Kathy Keller, The Songs of Jesus
