Quotes and Notes

"There is no condition of human misery which Christ cannot alleviate. None is so sunk in sin that He cannot redeem them. For all in the world there is hope. Look on the extremest forms of sin. We can regard them all with the assurance that Christ can cleanse them—prostitutes, thieves, respectable worldlings. None is so bad as to have lost His love. None is so bad as to be excluded from the purpose of His death. None is so bad as to be beyond the reach of His cleansing power. None has wandered so far that he cannot come back...As long as man is man, so long is God ready to receive him back. There is no place where sun does not shine. No heart is given over to irremediable hardness. None ever comes to Christ in vain. The Saviour is greater than all our sins."

- Alexander MacLaren (1826-1910), "First to Mary"

"Do we need hope? Yes. May Christians hope? Yes. Are we ever beyond hope? No. Is the greatness of our hope an index of the graciousness of God? Yes. Does our hope of salvation bring joy, energy, faithfulness and a desire to be of use to God? Yes, yes, yes, yes. May we hope that God will use us each day to his glory, even though we are not as yet perfectly sanctified? Yes. Is this glorious good news? Yes."

- J. I. Packer (1926-2020), Never Beyond Hope

"Life is not an aimless groping. We are called. 'By his grace' means that God does not look around to see who will best suit his purposes and then single them out because he is pretty sure they will do a good job. It means that God has a capacity so large in love and purpose that he calls us in order to do something for us - to give us something. Grace."

- Eugene Peterson (1932-2018), Traveling Light
