Quotes and Notes

"By no means were all of [John's] readers poor and persecuted by an oppressive system: many were affluent and compromising with the oppressive system. The latter are offered not consolation and encouragement, but severe warnings and calls to repent. For these Christians, the judgments which are so vividly described in the rest of the book should appear not as judgments on their enemies so much as judgments they themselves were in danger of incurring, since worshipping the beast was not something only their pagan neighbours did. Worshipping the beast was something many of John's Christian readers were tempted to do . . ." - Richard Bauckham, The Theology of the Book of Revelation

The whole Pergamene church is called on to repent - not only those who hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, but the rest who tolerate them. The church's integrity is endangered by the presence of people who advocate such views and practices. Indeed, the toleration of sub-Christian faith and morals within the fellowship implies a culpable indifference of the church to the very things which distinguish it from paganism. Failure to repent, therefore, will entail a coming of Christ in judgment to the church of Pergamum."

- G.R. Beasley-Murray, Revelation
