Quotes and Notes

"Refusal to consider change under the direction of the Holy Spirit is a spiritual problem, not an intellectual problem."

- Francis Schaeffer (1912-1984), The Church at the End of the 20th Century

"As I seek to [move a man toward the logical conclusions of his presuppositions], I need to remind myself constantly that this is not a game I am playing. If I begin to enjoy it as a kind of intellectual exercise, then I am cruel and can expect no real spiritual results. As I push the man off his false balance, he must be able to feel that I care for him. Otherwise I will only end up destroying him, and the cruelty and ugliness of it all will destroy me as well. Merely to be abstract and cold is to show that I do not really believe this person to be created in God's image and therefore one of my kind. Pushing him towards the logic of his presuppositions is going to cause him pain; therefore, I must not push any further than I need to."

- Francis Schaeffer (1912-1984), The God Who Is There

"I took about two months, and I walked in the mountains whenever it was clear. And when it was rainy, I walked back and forth in the hayloft over our chalet. I thought and wrestled and prayed, and I went all the way back to my agnosticism. I asked myself whether I had been right to stop being an agnostic and to become a Christian. I told my wife, if it didn't turn out right I was going to go back to America and put it all aside and do some other work. I came to realize that indeed I had been right in becoming a Christian. But then I went on further and further and wrestled deeper and asked, 'But then where is the spiritual reality, Lord, among most of that which calls itself orthodoxy?'"

"And gradually I found something. I found something that I had not been taught, a simple thing but profound. I discovered the meaning of the work of Christ, the meaning of the blood of Christ, moment by moment in our lives after we are Christians— the moment-by-moment work of the whole Trinity in our lives because as Christians we are indwelt by the Holy Spirit. That is true spirituality."

- Francis Schaeffer (1912-1984), Two Contents, Two Realities
